Obscenity Case Ruling Reversed

By RICHARD BRADEE

Sentinel Washington Bureau

Washington, D. C. - The United States Supreme Court Monday reversed a ruling by Federal Judge James E. Doyle of Madison, Wis., who held that a section of the federal obscenity law was unconstitutional.

The case was sent back to Doyle's court with instructions that it be reconsidered in the light of two US Supreme Court decisions last month in obscenity cases.

Doyle's ruling came on Nov. 24, 1970, when he dismissed three indictments against five New York City book sellers who had transported admittedly obscene material to Wausau, Wis.

Defendants Identified

The defendants were identified in court briefs as the B & H Dist. Corp., Bark Book Dist., Inc., R. Ford, H. Wasserman and Robert Barkow.

Doyle's ruling was based on a 1969 US Supreme Court decision that the private possession of obscene material is not a crime. In that case, the court held that the First Amendment to the Constitution prevented prosecution in such cases.

Doyle said that since the First Amendment protected the individual's right to receive obscene material, the amendment also protected the right to send such material in interstate transportation.

Protection of Children

He pointed out that the obscenity law, as interpreted at that time, was intended to protect children and unwilling adults from exposure to obscene material.

The cases last month, however, determined that the right to privacy under the First Amendment did not protect those who were in the business of distributing obscene material.

The federal law provides a maximum of a $5,000 fine or five years in prison for the first offense and a maximum of a $10,000 fine or 10 year prison term for subsequent offenses.

Indicted by Jury

The two corporations and three individuals had been indicted by a federal grand jury. Last Nov. 24, Doyle dismissed the indictments.

In his decision, Doyle said the federal law does not distinguish between transportation which presents danger to minors or the danger of obtrusion upon unwilling adults and transportation which does not present these dangers.

He said the dissemination of obscene matter through interstate transportation does not expose children to obscenity nor "assault the sensibility of an unwilling adult public" — among the Supreme Court guidelines on obscenity.

Re Milwaukee letter to the Bureau, September 18, 1972.

On September 14, 1972, USA JOHN O. OLSON, WDN, Madison, Wisconsin, advised the Honorable JAMES E. DOYLE, Judge, Federal District Court, has ruled that the law prohibiting transportation of obscene materials interstate was unconstitutional because it was too broad.

OLSON stated DOYLE's reasoning for the decision was that the law did not distinguish between non-commercial possession of obscene books in one's home and while traveling interstate by public conveyance as compared with commercial interstate transportation of obscene materials.

OLSON said he has requested the United States Department of Justice to initiate another appeal to the United States Supreme Court regarding DOYLE's decision. He advised he anticipates the Justice Department will act upon his request as there is another case in court pending which will decide the issue.

Judge Doyle Voids Law On Obscene Materials

A law against interstate transportation of obscene material has been declared unconstitutional in U. S. District Court on the grounds it abridges a person's right to possess such material for non-commercial purposes.

Judge James E. Doyle dismissed a case against a distributing firm and four other defendants, accused of transporting "obscene, lewd, lascivious and filthy magazines," to Wausau.

Although the defendants' actions appeared to be commercially motivated, the fact that the federal law does not allow for non-commercial transportation of obscenity makes it unconstitutional, Doyle said.

He said the U.S. Supreme Court ruled in 1969 that the First Amendment to the Constitution protects a person's right to possess obscene materials at home.

"I can see no rational basis to distinguish between non-commercial possession of an obscene book in one's home and non-commercial possession of an obscene book while traveling interstate in a plane, bus or train," Doyle said in a five-page opinion.

"A defendant is not limited to a challenge of the statute as applied to him, even though the alleged conduct attributed to him is conduct which could constitutionally be proscribed by a more narrowly drawn statute," Doyle added.

Ban on Bus Passenger's Obscene Magazine Voided

The question of whether it is illegal to transport obscene materials interstate on a bus, plane, or train may again find its way from the Federal District Court to the U.S. Supreme Court.

Federal Judge James E. Doyle Thursday ruled that a federal law prohibiting such interstate commerce was unconstitutional because it was too broad.

TWO YEARS AGO Doyle dismissed three counts against B and H Distributing Corp., New York City, another New York corporation, and three employees for transporting obscene magazines from New York to Wausau.

Doyle said at the time that such transport was protected by the First Amendment. U. S. Atty. John O. Olson appealed the decision to the nation's highest court, and the High Court overruled Doyle and returned the case for prosecution.

THE BOOK distributors then argued that the law was overbroad because it could include individuals that carry with them on a plane, bus, or train obscene books or magazines.

Doyle Thursday again found the law unconstitutional, but this time on the new grounds argued by the book distributors, and dismissed the indictment.

The U.S. Supreme Court has

JUDGE DOYLE

protected the right of a man to have obscene materials in his own home, Doyle said.

"I CAN PERCEIVE no rational basis to distinguish between non-commercial possession of an obscene book in one's home and non-commercial possession of an obscene book while traveling interstate in a plane, bus, or train," the judge said.

Olson said he had written the U.S. Dept. of Justice Thursday to get approval for another appeal to the U.S. Supreme Court of Doyle's new decision.

APPEAL

Re Milwaukee letter to Bureau dated 1/16/73.

A recheck of the Dockets of the U. S. Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit on January 26, 1973, by SA [REDACTED] determined that no appeal has been docketed in the matter U. S. A. v. B & H Distributing Corporation, Et Al.

b6
